

National Award – Quality Adds another Feather in Allengers’ Cap

Allengers Medical Systems Ltd. recently won the prestigious National Award (1st Prize) for manufacturing Quality Products (Electromedical Instruments / Equipments). The award was handed over to the company’s Chairman, Mr. Suresh Sharma, by the Hon’ble Prime Minister of India, Dr. Manmohan Singh.

The award ceremony was organized by the Ministry of MSMEs and executed successfully at Vigyan Bhawan, New Delhi, on March 1, 2014. The organizers had exclusively designed a set criterion to choose from among the nominees for the award. In order to check the quality of the products of the MSMEs (micro, small and medium enterprises), the Ministry evaluated raw materials, manufacturing practices, export performance, growth trends, pollution control, quality control standards, services offered to consumers, use and choice of technology, future plan/vision, strategic initiatives, and the like.

A number of companies were in the list of nominations, but Allengers proudly proved to be an outperformer on account of its potential to deliver the best it can. National level applications were sent to the Ministry by State level committees under the Chairmanship of Secretary, Industries and Technical divisions of DC (MSME). After thoroughly and successfully evaluating these applications, the jury chose Allengers as the winner.

Allengers has now come a long way in its journey to excellence, proving each of its steps year on year to be firm and effective. On account of its own manufacturing unit, one of the largest in India (including R&D and QC setups), to check raw materials and end products, the company is heading further to touch new heights down the road.
